

Section I: Expenditure indicators

Average household size tabulated by household expenditure and per-capita expenditure (cross-tabulated by urban, rural and combined urban and rural regions)

The rapid survey results indicate that the average household size was 6.8 individuals, with an average of 6.3 individuals for urban households and 7.8 individuals for rural households (Tables 1.1 to 1.3).

Household expenditure and household size were positively correlated (Table 1.1). Average household size ranged from 4.9 in the lowest expenditure group (less than 45 thousand ID per month) to 8 in the highest expenditure group (more than 1,800,000 ID per month).

The opposite trend was revealed for per-capita incomes (calculated as individual shares of household incomes) (Table 1.2). Average household size ranged from 7.7 in the lowest expenditure group (less than 10,000 ID per person per month) to 5.5 in the highest expenditure group (more than 300,000 ID per person per month).

The distribution of numbers of households and numbers of persons by household size is shown in Table 1.3. Urban areas had a greater proportion of 1 to 8 person households, and rural areas a greater proportion 9 person and larger households.

Household average expenditure on consumption and non-consumption items tabulated by household expenditure groups and by per-capita expenditure groups

The average monthly total expenditure for all households was 494,025 ID, with urban household expenditure averaging 505,921 ID and rural household expenditure averaging 468,857 ID (Tables 1.4a to 1.6a, and Tables 1.10a to 1.12a).

The average monthly household expenditure on consumption of commodities and services by all households was 460,465 ID, with urban household monthly expenditure averaging 496,532 ID and rural household monthly expenditure averaging 384,183 ID (Tables 1.4a to 1.6a). Note that the purchase of motor vehicles and other consumer durables is included in consumption expenditure. This factor affects reported spending on transport, and on household tools and equipment, especially in the higher expenditure groups. Households were assigned to expenditure groups based upon consumption expenditure, rather than total expenditure.

The average household monthly expenditure for non-consumption categories amounted to 33,560 ID, with 9,389 ID in urban areas and 84,863 ID in rural regions (Tables 1.4a to 1.6a). Non-consumption expenditure includes capital expenditure, taxes and fees, as well as bank deposits. The much higher expenditure on non-consumption items in rural areas can be attributed to the purchase of large amounts of household construction materials by a small number of rural households. These transactions show as high levels of capital expenditure for two household consumption based expenditure groups and also inflate the capital expenditure totals in tables 1.5a and 1.6a, 1.11a and 1.12a.

The breakdown of consumption expenditure by consumption categories showed that the proportion spent on food and non-alcoholic beverages amounted to 46.85% overall (Table 1.6b). This is less than the proportions for previous years where it amounted to 61.7% in 1993 and 50% in 1988, reflecting a possible improvement in living conditions through the recent period. The proportion of household expenditure on foodstuffs by household expenditure groups ranged from 72.35% in the lowest expenditure group (less than 45,000 ID) to just 11.81% in the highest expenditure group (more than 1,800,000 ID). After an insignificant rise from the lowest group to the next group, the percentage expenditure on foodstuffs decreased steadily as household expenditure increased, with minor alternations. The relative expenditure on food fell sharply from 30.79% in the second highest income group to 11.81% in the highest income group. The urban and rural relative spending on foodstuffs followed the same pattern as the relative spending for the combined urban and rural samples (Tables 1.4b and 1.5b, compared to Table 1.6b).

The average expenditure proportion on the transport category amounted to 18.55%, which can be compared to 5% and 4% for the previous survey years of 1993 and 2002, respectively (Table 1.6b). That is another indicator of improvement in household living standards, reflecting a surge in the purchase of motor vehicles and, to a lesser extent, vehicle fuel. Spending in this category increased from 3.28% of expenditure in the lowest expenditure group to 15.35% in the second highest group, before jumping to 64.43% in the highest expenditure group. That jump reflects the purchase of motor vehicles by wealthiest households. The next most significant expenditure category is household tools and equipment, which includes most other consumer durables. This category accounted for 9.62% of expenditure, compared with 4% in 1993. In this category, there is a jump in the average proportion of expenditure in the fourth, third and second highest income groups, with a relative fall in the highest income group.

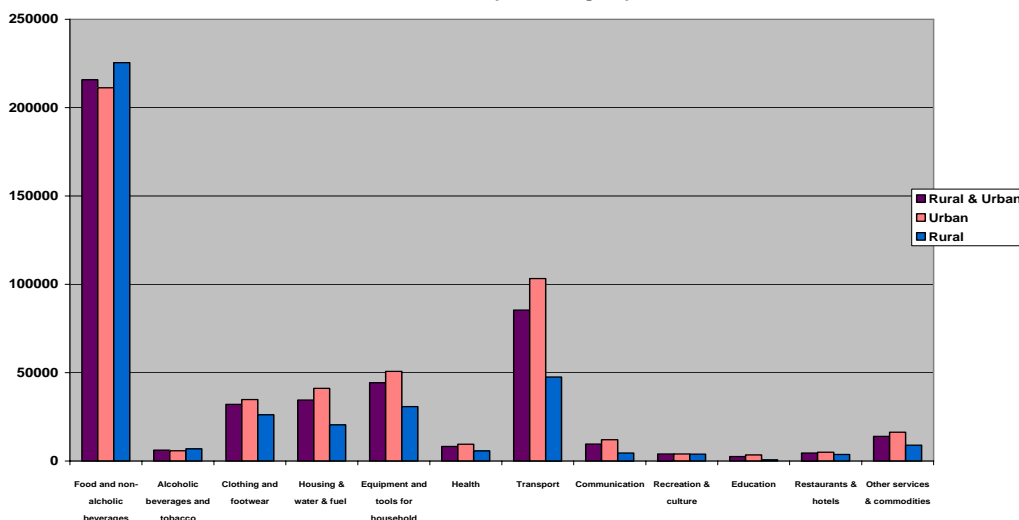

These categories of goods are characterized by low comparative costs due to absence of taxes and duties on imported motor vehicles and durable goods, as well as the price subsidies applied to petroleum fuels. In both cases, the proportion of urban expenditure devoted to these categories is higher (20.80% and 10.21%) than the proportion of rural expenditure (12.39% and 5.31%).

The proportion of expenditure on housing, water and domestic fuel amounted to 7.48% overall, which is low compared with 1993 when the proportion was 13%, possibly due to the exclusion of the imputed rent for owner-occupied houses in the current expenditure survey.

Relative expenditure on communication amounted to 2.07% of total expenditure, which, although low, includes the costs of internet access as well as the use of mobile phones. The survey showed that 24.5% of households possess a mobile phone. The percent of expenditure on health amounted to 1.78% of the total, compared with 1.1% in 1993.

All of the same trends were found in the monthly household expenditure when analyzed by per capita expenditure groups (Tables 1.10 to 1.12), for which the aggregate totals are of course the same as in the tables described above.

Average of monthly household expenditure on commodities and services by monthly household expenditure groups

Household average per-capita expenditure on consumption and non-consumption items tabulated by household expenditure groups and by per-capita expenditure groups

The average monthly total expenditure per individual within households was 72,817 ID, with the per-capita urban expenditure averaging 80,024 ID and the per-capita rural expenditure averaging 60,403 ID (Tables 1.7a to 1.9a and Tables 1.13a to 1.15a).

The average monthly per capita expenditure on consumption of commodities and services across all households was 67,871 ID, with urban per-capita monthly expenditure averaging 78,539 ID and rural per-capita monthly expenditure averaging 49,493 ID (Tables 1.7a to 1.9a).

The average per-capita monthly expenditure for non-consumption categories amounted to 4,947 ID, with 1,485 ID in urban areas and 10,910 ID in rural regions (Tables 1.7a to 1.9a). The pattern of expenditures by category across expenditure groups was similar to that already described in the section on expenditure by households as discussed above (Tables 1.7b to 1.9b compared to Tables 1.4b to 1.6b).

Similar observations apply to the analysis of per-capita expenditure on consumption and non-consumption items by household per-capita income groups (Tables 1.13a to 1.15a, compared to Tables 1.7a to 1.9a, and tables 1.13b to 1.15b compared to Tables 1.10b to 1.12b).

Average household and per-capita monthly expenditure on consumption and non-consumption items tabulated by household size groups

The household total and per-capita monthly expenditure have both been tabulated by the size of households, ranging from households with 1 person through to households with 16 or more persons (Tables 1.16 to 1.21).

The overall expenditure in consumption and non-consumption categories is exactly the same as in the preceding sets of tables (1.4 to 1.15).

Overall, average household consumption expenditure increased rapidly from 1-2 person households through 5-6 person households. Average expenditure then increased slowly with household size to 11-12 person households, stepped up for 13-14 person households and dropped again for larger households. Average expenditure for households of 11 persons and more was nearly twice the average expenditure for households of 1 to 4 persons (Table 1.18a). Among urban households, average consumption expenditure was higher for all household sizes except 11-12 person households (Table 1.16a), while among rural households, the reverse was true, with average expenditure lower for all sizes except 11-12 person households (Table 1.17a). Urban households of that size spent much less on transport than households of any other size.

Average per-capita consumption expenditure showed a decreasing trend with household size (Tables 1.19 to 1.21). Overall, average per-capita consumption expenditure for households with 11 or more persons was less than half of that for households with 1 to 6 persons. Again, average per-capita consumption was lower among rural households and higher among urban households for all household sizes except 11-12 person households.

Average and median household monthly expenditure on consumption and non-consumption items tabulated by household decile expenditure groups

The average and median household monthly expenditures have each been tabulated by groups covering deciles of household expenditure (Tables 1.22 to 1.24).

Households have been divided into groups based upon increasing deciles of household consumption expenditure. Each group includes therefore included exactly ten percent of households. For each group, the average expenditure has been tabulated for each category of consumption and non-consumption expenditure. In addition, the median expenditure (the expenditure for the household exactly half way in the group, ranked in order of expenditure) has been tabulated for total consumption expenditure and for overall total expenditure. Except for the lowest deciles, the medians were less than the averages.

The household expenditure on consumption ranged from an average of 95,875 ID for the lowest decile to 1,720,147 ID for the highest decile. For urban households the range was from 102,486 ID to 1,930,360 ID, whereas for rural households the range was from 85,833 ID to 1,257,017 ID. The ratio of expenditures from highest to lowest deciles was 17.9 overall, 18.8 for urban households and 14.6 for rural households. These ratios suggest relatively high levels of inequality of expenditure, among both urban and rural households, with higher relative inequality among urban households.

Non-consumption expenditure was relatively modest for urban households, at less than 2% of consumption and overall expenditure. For rural households, non-consumption expenditure was 21.5% of consumption expenditure and 17.7% of total expenditure. The explanation is the high capital expenditure by a few rural households in consumption expenditure decile groups 8 and 10. Without that capital expenditure by those households, the non-consumption expenditure for the rural households would be around 2% of consumption and total expenditure.
